Dear Mr. Rowell

Your letter of the fourth exasperates me.

You enclose a copy of my response to you of the first, pay no attention to what I said trying to inform you, encircled what I was quite specific in saying was not available and now waste still more of the little time I have left at almost 78 to tell you all that I can, which is what I've already told you. I've encircled it in red.

I went to court and sued and among the items they got away with withholding ("and again the court refused ~~disclosure~~ to compel disclosure") are those you ask me all over again, how you can get copies of those suppressed teletypes.

I've tried to be patient, I've tried to be helpful even though you have yet to demonstrate even the most superficial interest in fact that I've brought to light and published so that people like you could have it available, and you put me to this trouble or take this much time from work I could do so utterly stupidly.

Yes, the name is Eldon Rudd. But I'm not spending another minute in these kinds of impositions. All you need to get it from the FBI is what you know.

Sincerely,

Handwritten signature
